Residency Preparation

What is a residency?

A pharmacy residency is a paid experience that enhances your confidence and abilities, making you more competitive in the job market for a wide variety of specialty career paths. Residency training provides the opportunity to complete one to two years of advanced training in patient care, interprofessional healthcare provider collaboration, research, teaching and management. To learn more, visit ASHP's Student Residency Guide.

Becoming a Competitive Residency Candidate

Getting an interview

To enhance the likelihood of a residency program offering you an interview, it is essential for you to demonstrate, on paper, that you have the skills necessary for learning and professional development. Structure your CV, letters of recommendation, and essays to highlight these skills.

Highlighting your skills & qualities in the interview

The interview is used as a time to show the program who you are and why you are the perfect candidate by speaking about your experiences and how they will make you a successful resident and practitioner. Some opportunities are already built into the program (in red), while others are available for you to seek out independently (in grey) for personal and professional growth.

Residency Preparation

Residency Mentorship

GOALS

- Provide students seeking opportunities in post-graduate residency training with individualized mentorship
- Improve a pharmacy student's likelihood of successfully securing the post-graduate residency of her/his choice
